RIVERA & CAMILO FACE OFF IN S.D. 33

STATE SEN. GUSTAVO RIVERA (S.D. 33) and former NYC Board of Elections commissioner, MIGUELINA CAMILO, faced off in a debate hosted by Schneps Media on Monday, July 25, 2022, in the context of the State Democratic primary race for redrawn senate district 33.

By EMILY SAWAKED & SILE MOLONEY

The recent State and congressional redistricting process has been confusing to put it mildly, but it has had one benefit. Because the State senate and congressional primary elections have been delayed to Aug. 23, it means voters have had more time to get to know the candidates aiming to represent them in 2023.

On Monday, July 25, Schneps Media hosted a debate between the two Democratic candidates running for the "new" Senate District 33 seat. They are incumbent, progressive State Sen.

Project Renewal's Bedford Green House Opens

By EMILY SAWAKED

Nearly 1,500 people are recorded as being homeless every month in The Bronx, according to City data, with many living in shelters located around the borough. According to State Sen. Gustavo Rivera (S.D. 33) and one city agency representative we spoke to, various non-profits, government representatives, elected officials and some candidates running for office have been pushing over many years to reduce these numbers and raise awareness of the homelessness crisis in the borough.

One positive result of these sustained local efforts is the opening of Bedford Green House, a supportive permanent housing project located at 2865 Creston Avenue in Bedford Park. Designated for people previously living in shelters, the complex was formally opened on Thursday, July 14, following its conception in 2014.

Built by the nonprofit, Project Renewal, which serves the entire City, in conjunction with NYC Department of Housing Preservation & Development, Bedford Green House offers various support services to its residents. It also houses a community room, two elevators, a bicycle storage room, a laundry room, a 24-hour front desk concierge, a rooftop terrace, a rooftop greenhouse and a playground.

Eric Rosenbaum, CEO and president of Project Renewal, told Norwood News, "The manent fixture on the property.

Rosenbaum said one challenge was understanding the scope of the rock interface at the site, the second was on September 11, 2019, when the general contractor went bankrupt.

"The building was, at that point, 90 percent completed, but they just stopped, and the clock is ticking for us, whether they're building it or not," he said, adding that their insurance policy only remained active as long as construction was ongoing.

Then, the pandemic hit. Rosenbaum said, "When we brought a problem up to work was a problem, and then the supply chain disruptions happened," Rosenbaum said. "I remember there were

Reid and her son lived at a women and children's shelter in The Bronx prior to their move. Now, she said, she gets to live rent-free with her son in the new building. She said because there is only one bedroom, her son sleeps in the living room. Still, living in the building, she said, has been a dream come true.

Reid added that as she watched construction on the project unfold, she always wondered if she could eventually live there and luckily, she got selected. Because of the garden, she and her son get to eat the vegetables they grow, and come to life in the neighborhood. "I'm an enormous believer in supportive housing," he said. "When I first began my tenure 11 years ago, I didn't know what it was. When it was explained to me, when I started to talk to folks like Alexis, folks who have been served by it, these are folks that, whatever situation they've had in their lives, have never had real stability."

The senator said housing like Bedford Green provides stability for people who have experienced a lot of instability. "It has absolutely demonstrated that not only does it provide stability to them as individuals but by extension, to their families and to the communities that they live in. Affordable housing structures like this one actually strengthen the community as a whole," Rivera said.

He is also pushing for more State funding for more supportive housing in the district. "I think we need to do more at the state level, honestly. Not only I come to things like this, and [will] talk endlessly about how essential it is, I will talk to my neighbors," he said.

Project Renewal will soon start Phase II of the project, which includes the opening of an additional building on Jerome Avenue, and even more amenities. Rosenbaum said the new building will house 116 apartments, a primary care clinic and a children's library and the two buildings
